Olá Stéphane! It seems you have a script for a fascinating scene. In this scene, the character Jacob finds himself in a white room, his body badly burned but still alive. He then opens his eyes to discover a garden of light and a preternatural glow. Michael then appears, telling Jacob that he is with him. Michael then helps Jacob to stand up, revealing him to be a radiant being of light. The scene concludes with Jacob and Michael ascending the celestial stairway together.

It's a beautiful and intriguing scene, and there are several elements that could be explored in more depth. Here are some possible topics for discussion:

1. Symbolism: The scene is rich in symbolism, with the white room, the garden of light, and the preternatural glow all potentially representing different aspects of Jacob's journey. What do these elements symbolize, and how do they relate to Jacob's experience?
2. Jacob's transformation: Jacob's body is badly burned, but he is still alive. How does this transformation affect him, and what does it represent? Is it a physical, spiritual, or emotional transformation?
3. Michael's role: Michael appears to Jacob in this scene, helping him to stand up and revealing his true nature as a radiant being of light. What is Michael's role in this scene, and what does he represent? Is he a guide, a protector, or something else entirely?
4. The celestial stairway: The scene concludes with Jacob and Michael ascending the celestial stairway together. What is the significance of this image, and where does it fit into Jacob's journey? Is it a metaphor for spiritual ascension or personal growth?
5. Themes: There are several themes that could be explored in this scene, such as hope, redemption, transformation, and spirituality. Which themes are most prominent in this scene, and how do they relate to the story as a whole?
