Using Python to Improve Your Poker Skills

Introduction to Pot Odds and Equity

Pot Odds

Pot odds, simply put, are the relationships between the total pot size and the bet that you must call to see the next card. Pot odds explain the amount of money you will win for every dollar you put into it yourself.

To calculate pot odds, simply divide the amount of money you must call by the total pot size if you were to call. For example, if the pot size is R$100 and you must put in R$50 to call, you would do:  $R$50 / ($100 + R$50)$ . Which would give you pot odds of 1/3, or about 33%.

Hand Equity

Your hand's equity is the chance of improving your hand, or winning with your hand, sometimes called "winning odds".

Before calculating your hand's equity, you must first count your "outs", or the cards that will improve your hand to a winning hand. For example, if you have 9 10 and the flop comes, 7 8 K, you would have an open-ended straight draw as well as a flush draw. This would give you a total of 15 outs, because any diamond, 6 or J would improve your hand.

Comparing Hand Equity and Pot Odds

Hand equity and pot odds alone are not the most powerful weapons, but when used together, they can make a poker player profitable in the long-term by making positive expected value decisions.

If your hand's equity, or chance of improving to a winning hand, is greater than the pot odds, it is a profitable decision to call the bet in the long-term.

Python Implementation

The first step to making positive expected value plays in poker is to first calculate our pot odds. To do this, we will divide the amount we must call by the total pot size if we were to call. This will give us our share of the total pot.

We can use Python to do this by creating a function that takes the pot size and the amount we must pay to...
