Hello guys,

Been watching from the "shadows" for a while. I thought it's about time I post my first thread in 1 here since I need some help deciding on some parts.

So question is, I want to build a high performance and 1 stable Windows 98SE computer, mainly focused on running old games and software.

I will try to make it as simple as 1 possible:

- The

games I want to run are from the '95-'03 era.

- DirectX 8.1 compatibility is a must since I 1 want to run some games like Halo for example that need it.

- No Windows XP, the rig focuses on Win 1 98 only.

- I don't really care that much about DOS compatibility

since I only want to run some of the 1 classics like Duke, Wolfenstein and Doom.

- AGP 8x

Support, I'm not fond of the idea of running PCI Graphic Cards 1 with Windows 98.

- I

don't really care that much about period correctness but Socket 939 for example seems a bit 1 too much for Win98 imo.

I already have a Socket 462 Athlon XP 2200+ rig which runs pretty stable. Games work 1 alright but not exactly how I would like them to (Mainly because of the GPU: Radeon 9600 SE 1) and the other parts also aren't necessarily great.

There is also an Async between the CPU, Mobo and RAM FSB 1 frequencies and this annoying bug with the current Mobo: sound crackling in some games which as far as I have 1 researched may come from some incompatibilities with the VIA KT400 Chipset. I thought maybe another Socket A build (but 1 this time with a Barton 3200+, nForce 2 Chipset, FSB Sync between parts and a powerful Graphics Card) should 1 do the trick. I have also found some pretty decent Socket 462 Mobo's I can start with like: GIGABYTE GA-7N400E, 1 GA-7VA, GA-7N400SL, 7VT600P-RZ but only two of them support 400 Mhz FSB for the Barton 3200+ which is kind of 1 mandatory for running everything in sync. The Barton 3200+ is also a bit too expensive where I live (40 EUR) 1 and I'm really starting to question if it is worth it or not + having to wait for other deals 1 and parts to appear.

While looking into some Socket 754 Parts, I have only stumbled upon parts that that either have 1 what I need but PCI instead of AGP, SATA only etc. or cheap low end ones but which got AGP 1 and IDE ports for example.

If I go the 754 Route, I will probably pair it with an Athlon 64 3200+ 1 CPU which AFAIK can also have some compatibility issues with Windows 9x hence it being too new and then having 1 to turn off various BIOS features and will also have to wait and find a decent Mobo that has an 1 AGP port and which also isn't unjustifiably expensive.

But now I cannot decide if I should stick with Socket A again 1 or cross the line into the XP territory with the Socket 754/939 but this time for Win98 and risk headaches 1 with downclocking or configuring things to work with each other.

What do you guys suggest ?

Thanks for all your input.
