Introduction

The following text presents the key points discussed during an interview with Tomas, founder of MyBookie and BetsfairBet.co.uk. The conversation covers various topics related to online sportsbooks, including live streaming, blackout periods, legal status in different countries, and more.

Live Streaming at Online Sportsbooks

When asked about the availability of live streaming at his platform, Tomas explains that MyBookie does not offer live streams as they cannot obtain rights for it. However, he mentions that there are other platforms where users can watch live sports content while betting on them. He believes that having a dedicated site with both live streaming and bookmaking would be beneficial but acknowledges the challenges in implementing such a feature.

Blackout Periods and Live Streaming

Tomas clarifies that there are no blackout periods for his platform, as they do not have any streams themselves. However, he notes that other platforms may experience occasional blackouts due to streaming rights issues with broadcasters like Sky Sports or ESPN. He suggests checking the availability of live content on specific events before betting on them at MyBookie.

Legal Status in Different Countries

Tomas confirms that all his sportsbooks, including BetfairBet and MyBookie, operate legally within their respective countries. He mentions that while there are no regulated licenses for online gambling in the United Kingdom, they comply with UK legislation by blocking users from regions where online gambling is restricted or illegal. In Australia, he explains that obtaining a license would require significant financial investment and adherence to strict regulations, which may not align with their current business model.

The Legal Status of Betting as an Activity in the UK

Regarding the legal status of betting as an activity in the United Kingdom, Tomas states that it is currently unregulated by law. The government has established measures to combat illegal gambling activities but does not regulate or tax sportsbooks and online casinos. He acknowledges the efforts made by UK authorities to address concerns related to money laundering and underage betting through advertising restrictions.

Conclusion

In conclusion, Tomas highlights that MyBookie is a legally operating sportsbook in various countries. While they do not offer live streaming due to rights limitations, users can still access other platforms for this purpose. The legal status of online gambling varies across different jurisdictions, with the UK currently unregulated but implementing measures to combat illegal activities. ***

Discussion on Offshore Online Gambling and Legalization in Australia

In offshore territory or a country that allows it? So we're not breaking any laws by operating out of Cyprus as an island state, as I mentioned before. We do pay taxes here – we pay corporate income tax on our profits every year which is 12% and then value added tax VAT at the rate of 9%.

Andrew: But you're not licensed in Cyprus are you? Or any other country that I know? In Australia for example. Tomas: No, we don't have a license from Cyprus or anywhere else – it's unregulated there too like the UK as well. So basically we just operate within the legislation of what we can and cannot do. We are also very strict on our age verification for all players to ensure they are over 18 years old, which is a requirement in any place you have gambling or betting available – you need to be older than 18.

Andrew: Yes, that's true! So as far as Australia goes then... You don't see it happening soon? Like I said at the beginning of our conversation, it is a hot topic there. Tomas: Well I think if they do want to legalise and regulate online gambling in Australia for example or some other country that does not currently allow it – they will have to look at how much money these operators are generating from that particular area where betting on sports isn't allowed but people still go ahead and place wagers with an offshore operator. If the government really wants to start regulating, then I think they would need a good reason for doing so as there is no actual demand in Australia for online gambling because you can only gamble at the Casino or TAB – sports betting isn't allowed apart from horse racing and that too only on Saturday afternoons.

Andrew: That's right, yes! You've just made an excellent point there Tomas, when governments talk about legalizing offshore online gambling they usually focus on tax revenue but ignore the fact that it will have zero effect in countries like Australia where no one is currently betting online.

Tomas: Exactly – there would be no difference between us and an Australian casino or TAB operator if you did legalise them, which I don't think they want to do because then their own revenues might fall off quite a bit... So my guess is that this will never happen in Australia unless something big changes. Andrew: Well, thank you Tomas! You have been really helpful and interesting to talk to as always – keep up the great work man! We'll be back with more news from the online gambling industry next time then... until then everyone take care Tomas: Thanks again Andrew for having me on your show, it was a pleasure chatting about everything related to this subject matter. I look forward to our next discussion soon! Bye bye now all and good luck out there! Cheers guys!!! Andrew: Goodbye everyone – stay tuned folks because we're coming back shortly with more exciting content from the world of online gambling including updates on regulation news etc... In the meantime if you want to learn even more about this industry then check out my book "Online Gambling For Dummies" available now at all good retailers & on Amazon.
